

A Day in My Dream World

My legs rustled in the leaves made from cookies, the unicorns stopped to look at me.

“Greetings,” said the unicorn. She came off the fresh rainbow.

I recognized the face. “Sparklehoof!” I exclaimed excitedly. “Long time no see! Where have you been?”

“Finding fresh rainbows, of course. The sun spoils the cotton candy,” she neighed.

“Where’s Whitecloud?” I asked.

“Oh, probably in her cottage. We should go visit her,” she answered.

When we got there the white she-cat with bright blue eyes looked at us. “Hi!” said Whitecloud the she-cat, while decorating a freshly baked cake. “Feel free to take a bite.”

The cake was as tall as her and tasted delicious. “What flavor is this?” Sparklehoof inquired.

“Stawberry!” Whitecloud exclaimed.

“Come on, lets explore!” Whitecloud mewed. The 3 of us walked into the forest.

Woof woof! a dog barged in. “Ruffeles!” I said over the noise. Ruffles stoped. He reached to a lolly tree branch.

“He wants a lollypop from the tree.” Sparklehoof said. Whitecloud leaped on the tree coming down with a fresh lollypop. Ruffeles slobbered the lollypop in happiness.

Boom! There is a yeti screaming, “Ro Ra Ri, I eat whatever I see! Including you! Ahhhhhhh!”

The four of us ran. We leaped into the water, and the mermaids helped us get home by letting us ride on them. “Thank you, mermaids for all your assistance!” Sparklehoof neighed.

The yeti went into space and ate the moon and turned into the moon.

“That should teach that yeti a lesson!” Ruffeles barked as we walked.

“Come on let’s go home before anything bad happens.” Whitecloud whined.

So, Whitecloud went to her cottage, Sparklehoof went to a fresh rainbow, Ruffles ran to his treehouse and the 4 of us lived happily ever after.
