Snow train

There hasn't been any snow in Little Rock this year and it is January. We really want snow and on Saturday morning guess what, there was a white covered blanket of snow everywhere. The house is cold and my dad and I pulled out a game called Empire Builder and I really like the game. It is about building a railroad network to deliver goods across North America. We set it up.

The next thing we know we are inside the game. First I will travel to Duluth where it is really snowy. Then I bought a ticket to go to Houston on a train. When I get there it is really sunny and I can't spot a single cloud. Then I buy a ticket to Seattle and when I get there it is really rainy and stormy, so I go and book a hotel room.

I get a book and sit by the fire and read. Suddenly the power goes out. I light up the hotel room with candles and then buy tickets to go to Mexico City. It is so hot that I'm sweating. So I went inside my hotel room and turned the temperature to fifty five degrees and then I got cold. The game was over and I won for the first time. I beat my dad and I was really happy.
