

My Cozy Day at Home

It was a snowy morning. My mom woke me up with the news that my school is closed today due to snowstorm. I felt sad hearing that as I had my Math Test today for which I have been preparing hard lately, but never mind, I can spend a day with my parents staying indoors.

After refreshing up, I went downstairs. I was delighted to see my parents make my favorite blueberry pancakes. I helped them by whisking the eggs, my dad added the butter milk and vanilla syrup while my mom added the flour in parts. Soon, the pancakes were ready. It was heartwarming to relish a breakfast together without having to rush to school. Breakfast on a cozy day hit different.

Lately, homework has been difficult, especially Division. Today, I got help from my dad who took the time to teach me with real life examples. This helped me understand the concepts deeper and I finished my homework in just 15 mins.

Later, the weather started to get colder. My mom and I craved something warm to drink. I quickly started making hot chocolate by melting dark chocolate, added hot milk and topped it with whipped cream. I served it hot to my mom, and she was pleasantly surprised as it was my first time making it.

As the sunset early and we were getting bored staying indoors, my dad insisted that we play Monopoly. We started playing the game while watching our favorite movie. It was my first time playing Monopoly, and I learned a lot about trading properties and managing cash.

Finally, it was time to go to bed. I grabbed my book and went to my room. As I settled down to sleep, I realized that this day turned out to be very magical as I had a chance to slow down, lookback, observe and try new things. I will cherish this cozy snow day forever.