

When I Helped Someone

By Sia Chandra

Based On A True Events

Have you ever helped someone or have been helped? Today I'm going to share a story where I helped my teacher, Mrs. Katie, and a few of my friends.

When I was five years old and in kindergarten I was one of the kids that knew how to read but some kids in my class didn't. Every single time we did D.R.E.A.M. time (drop everything and read time) everybody who didn't know how to read crowded around me. At first it was fun but eventually it got boring and I wanted to do something about it. So next D.R.E.A.M. time I told everybody "from now on I will no longer read to you but teach you how to read." And I did. I taught them how to put letters together, letter sounds, and punctuation. It was pretty fun and frustrating. Towards the end of the year I had helped a lot of my friends with their reading abilities. Mrs. Katie had been watching and was delighted when in the D.R.E.A.M time near the end of the year all she heard was kids sounding out words and reading.

Mrs. Katie was very happy and thankful of me for helping out. And I was pleased that I was able to help out.
