

WHEN I HELPED SOMEONE.

By Ria Krishnan

One sunny Saturday morning, my friend and I were playing tag - a game where one person chases other players. While we were playing, she was running as fast as a racehorse. That's when she tripped over a bench in the park- I heard her whimpering and I rushed over to check on her. I noticed her knee was bleeding and I could tell that she wanted to hit that bench. I quickly grabbed a Band-aid from my pocket and peeled it open. She took it from me and put it on, and then I helped her up onto her feet. I called her parents to come and make sure nothing was wrong. Her parents saw the Band-aid, carried her into the car, and took her back home. I felt happy that I got to help my friend. On Monday, when I saw her at school, I rushed over to ask if she was okay. When she nodded a thankful yes, I felt glad.
