

The Protective strength of my Parents

When I think about someone that protects me the most in my life, I don't have to think about it to much. It's always my mom and dad. They are like two strong walls of a shelter, standing on each side of me, keeping me safe no matter what happens. Even though they protect me in different ways, together they make me feel safe, loved and understood.

My mom protects me with her love and kindness. whenever I feel sad, scared, or worried, she is the first person to notice. She does not even need me to say anything. She just looks at my face and knows something is wrong. when she hugs me, it feels like a warm blanket wrapping around my heart. Her voice is soft and she always uses the right words to comfort me. When I'm nervous for a important test, she tells me to breath slowly and reminds me that trying my best is all that matters. When I get hurt from playing soccer, she listens carefully and helps me treat the wound. Her comfort is like a safe room where nothing will hurt me.

My dad protects me in a different way but equally important. He makes me feel strong and brave. when I'm scared to do something new, he stands beside by me and says, "You can do it!" He teaches me how to solve problems insted of running from them. If I make a mistake while painting, he does not get angry. He tells me you can do it and fix the painting with out needing to restart. Sometimes he makes jokes to cheer me up, and gives me me advice for things I do. Being around my dad makes me feel like I have a shield - not those metal ones, but a sheild of confidence and courage.

Together my mom and dad make the strongest shelter ever. They make our home a place where I can be my self, where I can learn, grow, and make mistakes with no fear. They protect me with love, with guidance, and promise that will always be with me, forever.

I realized that the strongest shelter in the world isn't a building. It's the people that love you the most. For me, that shelter is my mom and dad, and I feel lucky to have them every single day.
